Co-operative Societies Increase in Russia

Under Monarchy, 3,600 Belonging to Central Union Have Total Clientele of 10,000,000

Central Union of Russian Coperative Societies was founded in 896. It now comprises approximately 8,600 consumers' societies, 300 district leagues and 10,000 local cooperative organizations, making a total clientele of 10,000,000. The union claims to repesent 80 per cent of cooperative enterprises of all kinds in Russia. Allowing five to a family, it reaches nearly one-third of the population. The expected turnover in 1917 is 220,000,000 rubles.

After-War Problems

America will face one of the greatest agricultural and industrial problems in her history as the result of the war, last night.

"The ideal which America is fighting for," he said, "the ideal of democracy, will make Europe a better place in which to live after the war. When that ideal is won, many of our laborers are going back to Europe. The greater part of them have come here to avoid the very condition we are fighting against, and we must prepare to meet this problem with which victory will confront us."

DOMESTIC SITUATIONS WANTED FEMALE

Dressed Soldiers in France

The American young woman who carries a vision of a khaki-clad young crusader radiating glory wherever he appears may be appalled to learn that the American soldier is one of the least magnificent, so far as uniform goes, in France.

The beauty prize goes to the Portuguese, who have a well fitting "costume" that approaches lavender in color. Most of the Portuguese appear to be officers, and the sight of a cluster of them on a stroll back of the lines is something to be remembered.

The red ribbon goes to the sky-blue uniform of the French, who would be expected to produce something at once attractive and utilitarian. Sometimes the officers wear scarlet breeches. If the Italians were in France they would be entitled to a close third, but the position goes to the Belgians, who wear khaki brown, with red stripes and redtasselled, brimless hats.

The British Tommy and the American, also in khaki-brown, tie for the next position, the award probably going to Mr. Atkins because of his brass buttohs and the superior fulness of his uniform. Side by side the two would make a good illustration for a soap advertisement, the American soldier saying, "I wish my Uncle Sam would use non-shrinking soap."

Far beneath all others, as he is in var aims, is the Boche. He looks, as he has always looked, like a sack of clods. It is symbolical that the ugliest deeds should be committed in the only atrocious uniform in France and that the German doctrine of subordination of the individual to the glory of the feudal Kaiser should work itself out in clothing the athletic German body in ungainly penitentiary regalis.—Daily Oklahoman.
